Image Classification Using Content Based Image Retrieval:

Semantic and Interactive Content-based Image Retrieval Björn Barz,2020-12-23 Content based Image Retrieval CBIR ist ein Verfahren zum Auffinden von Bildern in gro en Datenbanken wie z B dem Internet anhand ihres Inhalts Ausgehend von einem vom Nutzer bereitgestellten Anfragebild gibt das System eine sortierte Liste hnlicher Bilder zur ck Der Gro teil moderner CBIR Systeme vergleicht Bilder ausschlie lich anhand ihrer visuellen hnlichkeit d h dem Vorhandensein hnlicher Texturen Farbkompositionen etc Jedoch impliziert visuelle hnlichkeit nicht zwangsl ufig auch semantische hnlichkeit Zum Beispiel k nnen Bilder von Schmetterlingen und Raupen als hnlich betrachtet werden weil sich die Raupe irgendwann in einen Schmetterling verwandelt Optisch haben sie jedoch nicht viel gemeinsam Die vorliegende Arbeit stellt eine Methode vor welche solch menschliches Vorwissen ber die Semantik der Welt in Deep Learning Verfahren integriert Als Quelle f r dieses Wissen dienen Taxonomien die f r eine Vielzahl von Dom nen verf gbar sind und hierarchische Beziehungen zwischen Konzepten kodieren z B ein Pudel ist ein Hund ist ein Tier etc Diese hierarchiebasierten semantischen Bildmerkmale verbessern die semantische Konsistenz der CBIR Ergebnisse im Vergleich zu herk mmlichen Repr sentationen und Merkmalen erheblich Dar ber hinaus werden drei verschiedene Mechanismen f r interaktives Image Retrieval pr sentiert welche die den Anfragebildern inh rente semantische Ambiguit t durch Einbezug von Benutzerfeedback aufl sen Eine der vorgeschlagenen Methoden reduziert das erforderliche Feedback mithilfe von Clustering auf einen einzigen Klick w hrend eine andere den Nutzer kontinuierlich involviert indem das System aktiv nach Feedback zu denjenigen Bildern fragt von denen der gr te Erkenntnisgewinn bez glich des Relevanzmodells erwartet wird Die dritte Methode erm glicht dem Benutzer die Auswahl besonders interessanter Bildbereiche zur Fokussierung der Ergebnisse Diese Techniken liefern bereits nach wenigen Feedbackrunden deutlich relevantere Ergebnisse was die Gesamtmenge der abgerufenen Bilder reduziert die der Benutzer berpr fen muss um relevante Bilder zu finden Content based image retrieval CBIR aims for finding images in large databases such as the internet based on their content Given an exemplary query image provided by the user the retrieval system provides a ranked list of similar images Most contemporary CBIR systems compare images solely by means of their visual similarity i e the occurrence of similar textures and the composition of colors However visual similarity does not necessarily coincide with semantic similarity For example images of butterflies and caterpillars can be considered as similar because the caterpillar turns into a butterfly at some point in time Visually however they do not have much in common In this work we propose to integrate such human prior knowledge about the semantics of the world into deep learning techniques Class hierarchies serve as a source for this knowledge which are readily available for a plethora of domains and encode is a relationships e g a poodle is a dog is an animal etc Our hierarchy based semantic embeddings improve the semantic consistency of CBIR results substantially compared to conventional image representations and features We furthermore present three different mechanisms for interactive image retrieval by incorporating user feedback to resolve the inherent semantic ambiguity present in the query image One of the proposed methods reduces the required user feedback to a single click using clustering while another keeps the human in the loop by actively asking for feedback regarding those images which are expected to improve the relevance model the most The third method allows the user to select particularly interesting regions in images These techniques yield more relevant results after a few rounds of feedback which reduces the total amount of retrieved images the user needs to inspect to find relevant ones Content-based Image Retrieval Using Deep Learning Anshuman Vikram Singh,2015 A content based image retrieval CBIR system works on the low level visual features of a user input query image which makes it difficult for the users to formulate the query and also does not give satisfactory retrieval results In the past image annotation was proposed as the best possible system for CBIR which works on the principle of automatically assigning keywords to images that help image retrieval users to query images based on these keywords Image annotation is often regarded as the problem of image classification where images are represented by some low level features an teh mapping between low level features and high level concepts class labels is done by supervised learning algorithms In a CBIR system learning of effective feature representations and similarity measures is very important for the retrieval performance Semantic gap has been the key challenge for this problem A semantic gap exists between low level image pixels captured by machines and the high level semantics perceived by humans The recent successes of deep learning techniques especially Convolutional Neural Networks CNN in solving computer vision applications has inspired me to work on this thesis so as to solve teh problem of CBIR using a dataset of annotated images Abstract From Content-based to Semantic Image Retrieval Aamer Saleh Sahel Mohamed,2010 Digital image archiving urgently requires advanced techniques for more efficient storage and retrieval methods because of the increasing amount of digital Although JPEG supply systems to compress image data efficiently the problems of how to organize the image database structure for efficient indexing and retrieval how to index and retrieve image data from DCT compressed domain and how to interpret image data semantically are major obstacles for further development of digital image database system In content based image image analysis is the primary step to extract useful information from image databases The difficulty in content based image retrieval is how to summarize the low level features into high level or semantic descriptors to facilitate the retrieval procedure Such a shift toward a semantic visual data learning or detection of semantic objects generates an urgent need to link the low level features with semantic understanding of the observed visual information To solve such a semantic gap problem an efficient way is to develop a number of classifiers to identify the presence of semantic image components that can be connected to semantic descriptors Among various semantic objects the human face is a very important example which is usually also the most significant element in many images and photos The presence of faces can usually be correlated to specific scenes with semantic inference according to a given ontology Therefore face detection can be an efficient tool to annotate images for semantic descriptors In this thesis a paradigm to process analyze and interpret digital images is proposed In order to speed up access to desired images after accessing image data image features are presented for analysis This analysis gives not only a structure for content based image retrieval but also the basic units ii for high level semantic image interpretation Finally images are interpreted and classified into some semantic categories by semantic object detection categorization algorithm Pervasive Computing and Social Networking G.
