However, the production of refined foods and rapid urbanization and high energy density diets have led to a high density of refined foods in energy, fats, and sugars. The exact make-up of a diversified balanced and healthy diet will vary depending on individual characteristics such as gender, lifestyle, and degree of physical activity, cultural context, and individual health status. However, the basic principles of a healthy diet include following the following: Fruit, vegetables, legumes, and beans; nuts and whole grains; eggs; unprocessed meats; millet, wheat, and brown rice. At least 400 g of fiber per day from fruits and vegetables, including cassava and other tubers. Total energy intake from free sugars should be less than 10% of total energy intake, with no more than 5% of total energy intake from added sugars. Total fat intake should be less than 30% of total energy intake, with no more than 10% of total energy intake from saturated fats and no more than 5% of total energy intake from trans fats.
