Abstract

A new kind of narrative is emerging from the network: the distributed narrative. Distributed narratives don't bring media together to make a total artwork. Distributed narratives explode the work altogether, sending fragments and shards across media, through the network and sometimes into the physical spaces that we live in. This paper begins an investigation into this new narrative trend, looking at how narrative is spun across the network and into our lives.

Introduction

We're used to narratives that have clear boundaries. Books have covers, feature films have title sequences and credits, and fairy tales have "Once upon a times" and "Happily ever afters." We have developed many ways of marking Aristotle's beginning, middle and end, both material (the darkening of the theatre, the title page of the book) and stylistic (the exposition, the denouement). Even as hypertext theorists began talking of books without ends (Douglas 2000), early hypertext fictions were published on diskettes, with covers and a limited number of nodes. Even on the web, most electronic literature today is self-contained, with few if any external links.

Distributed narratives are stories that aren't self-contained. They're stories that can't be experienced in a single session or in a single space. They're stories that cross over into our daily lives, becoming as ubiquitous as the network that fosters them.

This paper attempts to provide a map of distributive narratives. This is not an easy task, because it is hard to describe and locate things that are not things but connections. Trying to see how narratives can be split open and spread like this is important, because narratives are one of our main ways of understanding ourselves and of understanding our world. When the world changes, our ways of understanding it must change too, and as distributed
