What Is a Galaxy?

Read the passage and answer the questions.

A galaxy is a massive system composed of stars, stellar remnants, interstellar gas, dust, and dark matter all bound together by gravity. Galaxies come in various shapes and sizes and the most common form being spiral galaxies with complex patterns that define structure relative to the center of mass along with patterns, features, and other related features.

The Milky Way is one galaxy that contains our solar system and is classified as a barred spiral galaxy. It is estimated to have over 100 billion stars and spans about 100,000 light years in diameter. Locally, our own galaxy, like all other galaxies, experiences tidal and orbital forces. These interactions can lead to phenomena, such as galaxy mergers, where two or more galaxies collide and combine to form a larger galaxy.

Scientists are crucial in understanding the structure, evolution, and distribution. They are the building blocks of the universe, and studying them can provide insights into the formation of stars and planetary systems. Observing distant galaxies allows astronomers to look back in time as the light from these galaxies takes millions or even billions of years to reach us. This helps scientists understand the history of the universe and its expansion.

The study of galaxies has advanced significantly with the development of powerful telescopes and space observatories. Discoveries like the Hubble Deep Field revealed thousands of galaxies that were previously invisible. These observations have led to the discovery of billions of galaxies, including the role of dark matter and dark energy in their formation and evolution.

Understanding galaxies not only enhances our knowledge of the universe but also inspires curiosity about our place within it. Each galaxy is a vast and dynamic system that we hope to explore further in the future.
