What Is a Galaxy?

Read the passage and answer the questions.

A galaxy is a massive system of stars, stellar remnants, interstellar gas, dust, and dark matter all bound together by gravity. Galaxies come in various shapes and sizes and the most common form is being spiral, elliptical, and irregular. Galaxies that contain thousands to billions of stars are called dwarf galaxies, and those containing billions to trillions of stars are called large galaxies.

The Milky Way is the galaxy that contains our solar system and is classified as a barred spiral galaxy. It is estimated to have over 100 billion stars and spans about 100,000 light-years in diameter. Besides our own galaxy, there are many other galaxies, including spiral, elliptical, and irregular galaxies. These galaxies can be as small as a few light-years across, such as dwarf galaxies, or as large as billions of light-years across, such as galaxy clusters and superclusters.

Galaxies are crucial to understanding the universe's structure and evolution. They are the building blocks of the universe, and studying them can provide insights into the formation of stars and planetary systems. Observing distant galaxies allows astronomers to look back in time to the early stages of the universe, revealing how galaxies have evolved over billions of years. The Hubble Space Telescope has played a key role in this research, providing detailed images of galaxies and helping to determine their distance and composition.

The study of galaxies has advanced significantly with the development of powerful telescopes and space observatories. Astronomers use the Hubble Space Telescope, the James Webb Space Telescope, and other instruments to study galaxies in great detail. They also use computer simulations to model the formation and evolution of galaxies, helping to understand the complex processes that shape these cosmic structures, including the role of dark matter and dark energy in their formation and growth.

Understanding galaxies not only enhances our knowledge of the universe but also helps us understand our own place in it. Each galaxy is a vast and diverse system, and our home galaxy, the Milky Way, is just one of many billions of galaxies in the universe.

True or False
