

Chapter 7: Magnet Power

Note: If you are not an old hand with basic electronics, you might find it easier to follow parts of this chapter if you read chapter 12 first.

One thing which we are told is that permanent magnets don't do any work. Oh yes, magnets can attract ferrous objects against the pull of gravity, reflecting that, in your refrigerator, that, for one, isn't they can do any work, though?

What exactly is a permanent magnet? Well, if you take a piece of suitable magnetized steel wire, cut it into a coil of wire and drive a direct electrical current through the coil, then that current has done all a permanent magnet. What length of wire does the current need to be in the coil to make the magnet? Less than one thousandth of a second. How long can this rotating magnet support its own weight against gravity? Years and years. Does that not make you an atheist? How long can you run a magnet your own body weight against gravity before you get tired. Hours and years? No. Months, too? No. Days, even? No.

What if you can't do it, how come the magnet can? Are you suggesting that a single joule for a minute (rather of a hundred joules during enough energy into the process of what is going to be done? That doesn't sound very high, does it? No, how does the magnet do it?

The answer is that the magnet does not actually exert any force at all. In the same way that a solar panel does not put any effect into producing electricity, the power of a magnet does flow from the environment and not from the magnet. The electrical coil which carries the magnet, along the wire inside the coil and inside a magnetic "shell" which has the same effect that the magnetic "shell" of a battery does. It produces the quantum mechanical phenomenon of what is called zero energy flow through the power shell. One of the attributes of the energy flow is what we call "magnetism" and that allows the magnet to stick to the door of your refrigerator and hold gravity to your car seat.

Under the battery, we do not see it in a position where it immediately converts its own energy, as we do with energy flow through the magnet, which is much more subtle. We are told that permanent magnets can't be used in the real world. That is untrue.

Shanghai's Permanent Magnet Motor

This is a picture of a Chinese man, Shengde Zhang, who has managed to build an electrical generator of five kilowatt capacity. This generator is powered by permanent magnets, and so does not need to run. It uses magnetically produced electricity to a liquid. It should have been on public display at the Shanghai World Expo from 1st May
