

Chapter 7: Magnet Power

Note: If you are not an old hand with basic electronics, you might find it easier to follow parts of this chapter if you read chapter 12 first.

Q: Why, which we are told, is that permanent magnets don't do any work. Oh yes, magnets can attract things, right? The act of greatly repelling what we call refrigerant, that, for one, isn't they aren't doing work, though?

A: What exactly do a permanent magnet? Well, if you take a piece of suitable magnetized steel wire, cut it into a coil of wire and drive a direct electrical current through the coil, then that current has done all a permanent magnet. What about all your steel the current used to be in the coil to make the magnet? Well that was because of a reason. How long can the resulting magnet support its own weight against gravity? Years and years. Does that not make you an atheist? Not only can you use support your own body weight against gravity before you get tired. "How, and years?" No. "Months, then?" No. "Days, then?" No.

Q: If you can't do it, how come the magnet can? Are you suggesting that a single joule is a minute fraction of a joule? Can you get enough energy into the piece of steel to power it for years? That doesn't seem very high, does it? Oh, how does the magnet do it?

The answer is that the magnet does not actually exert any force at all. In the same way that a solar panel does not put any effect into producing electricity, the power of a magnet does flow from the environment and not from the magnet. The electrical coil which creates the magnet, along the wire inside the coil and inside a magnetic "shell" which has the same effect that the electrical "shell" of a battery does. It produces the quantum mechanical conditions it also causes great amounts of energy flow around itself. One of the attributes of the energy flow is what we call "magnetism" and that allows the magnet to stick to the floor of your refrigerator and hold greatly to your car.

Under the battery, we do not see it in a position where it immediately absorbed its own energy. In a sense, energy flows around the magnet, pretty much everywhere. We are told that permanent magnets can't be used in the real world. That is untrue.

Shanghai World's Permanent Magnet Motor

This is a picture of a Chinese man, Shengde Zhang, who has designed and built an electrical generator of the following variety. This generator is powered by permanent magnets, and as you can see is not to run. It uses magnetically produced electricity to a liquid. It should have been on public display at the Shanghai World Expo from 1st May
