

Special Senses - Vision

Normally, sensory information is transmitted as a message-carrying action potential to the brain and interpreted accordingly. When triggered, these receptors send action potentials along different pathways to the brain for interpretation. Thus, these specializations of the nervous system allow the body to sense and adjust to changing conditions in the environment very efficiently.

Five basic categories of general sensation that occur across the organism are: temperature changes, and mechanical stimuli—pressure, vibration, touch, etc. In addition, the receptors detect special senses—light, hearing, equilibrium, taste/smell—stimuli located in, and directly connected to, specific organ systems.

Eye and Vision

It interprets the different light wavelengths by detecting the appropriate receptors in the human eye.

It has four main parts: cornea, iris, lens, and retina. The cornea is the outermost part of the eye.

The iris is the colored part of the eye. It controls the amount of light entering the eye. The lens is a biconvex structure that focuses light on the retina. The retina is the light-sensitive part of the eye. It contains rods and cones that detect light and convert it into electrical signals that are sent to the brain. The optic nerve is the part of the eye that carries these signals to the brain.

Light rays enter the eye through the cornea and are focused by the lens onto the retina. Light rays enter at different angles. Thus, the light rays are focused on the eye parallel to the optical axis.

Cornea - transparent, curved, outermost part of the eye

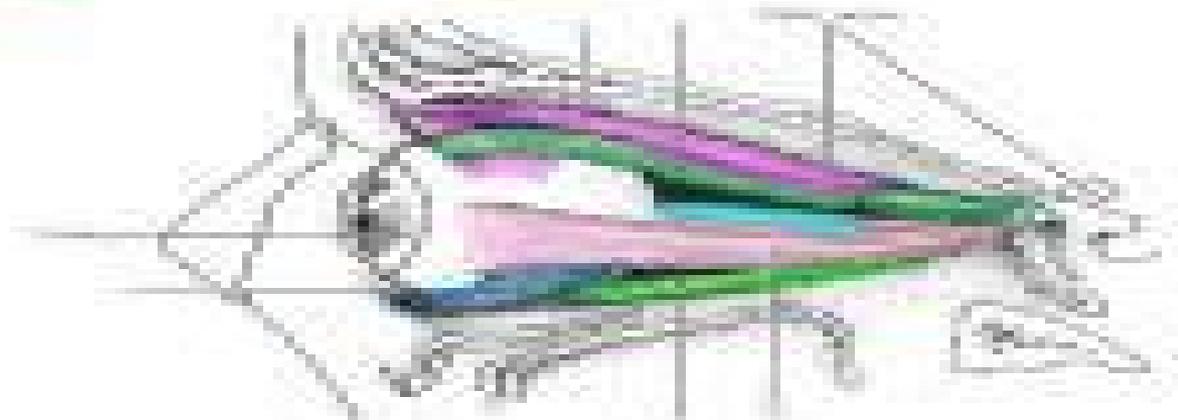

Iris - colored part of the eye

Optic Nerve - carries visual information to the brain

Lens - biconvex, curved

Retina - light-sensitive

Optic Chiasm - where optic nerves meet
