

NVIS ANTENNA THEORY AND DESIGN
AARGUK 20 FEB 2017

Requirements

A properly designed Near Vertical Incident Skywave (NVIS) antenna will have a directivity pattern that will maximize transmission and reception at high angles while rejecting low angle, long range noise. Further, this antenna must be tunable over at least an octave of frequency to track the local Critical Frequency (CF). The required directivity pattern is shown in Figure 1.

The vertical or elevation directivity pattern should have a beam width (-3dB) of approximately 100° and the horizontal or azimuth directivity pattern should be omnidirectional. The three-dimensional pattern should look like a toy balloon with the filler at the bottom.

Distant Noise Reduction

As we have all noticed, the most prevalent noise is long-range lightning from thunderstorm activity in the surrounding states. During summer evening nets, after D-layer absorption has dropped, thunderstorms, several states away can disturb Texas Army MARS nets. The "south-of-the-border" interference also falls into this category. There is little we can do about local thunderstorm noise, but a properly designed NVIS antenna can reduce the distant noise. An Australian scientist, C.J. Coleman, measured the noise directivity at both Alice Springs, Australia, and in South England (C.J. Coleman, The Directionality Of Atmospheric Noise And Its Impact Upon An HF Receiving System, HF Radio Systems and Techniques, Conference Publication No. 473 IEE 2000). The results of this study are shown in Figures 2 and 3. The horizontal direction, or azimuth, of the noise is displayed around the circle with North being towards the top of the page. The vertical angle or elevation, is depicted as the radial distance from the center with the center of the circle being 90° or overhead. Each dotted-line circle represents 30° of elevation.
