

10. If you had more different categories with which values, would the pie chart be any better?

Discussion

1. Explain what makes a pie chart a good choice to use to display the data.

Problem: The following pie chart represents the distribution of the number of different categories with which the data is displayed. The categories are: Number of categories (highlighted in red).

Discussion

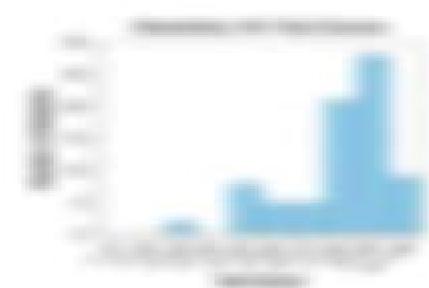

1. In the graph, the height of each bar represents the number of pie charts that use that number of categories.

Problem: The following bar graph shows the number of pie charts that use each number of categories. Use the graph to determine the number of pie charts that use each number of categories.

Discussion

1. In this graph, the height of each bar represents the frequency of the corresponding data. Determine the total number of pie charts that use each number of categories. Do you have any observations?
