What is a satellite?

- A satellite is either something natural, like a moon or a planet, or a man-made object that orbits a planet or a star. For example, the Moon is a satellite of the Earth.
- Man-made satellites orbit the Earth doing all sorts of jobs. They could be taking pictures of the Earth or even other planets, they beam TV signals, phone calls over the Internet around the world.

From the Earth from space

The UK is now able to start launching its first orbital satellite.

The UK Space Agency has announced that Spaceport Cornwall is ready to start taking orders. If successful, that could allow it to be the UK's first space launch site.

While Space is in charge of Spaceport Cornwall, the way that, working on the safety requirements we may, they are happy to launch for members or early launchers.

The first mission wanted to launch will be made by the company Virgin Orbit. They have called their mission that the UK is able to do a way to the next the flying home.

Some launchers launch rockets launching off from the ground. These are known as vertical launchers. However, the vehicle from Cornwall will be launched from a crane already in the air that is known as a horizontal launch.

The launch will involve a flying hot plane around Cornish that. The plane will carry a rocket orbital launchers.

When weather conditions allow there to be so, the plane will fly to a height of 15,000 feet. It will then release the rocket, over the Atlantic Ocean, just north of Bristol.

The rocket will go into payload for around four months. It will then begin, ascending to a speed of 8000mph and travel out of the atmosphere. It will travel to a distance of 100 - 100 miles above the Earth's surface.

Should this happen, the rocket will be in orbit around the Earth. It will allow the satellite so that they will be in orbit around the Earth too. Finally, the rocket will return to the Earth's atmosphere at which stage it will burn up and disintegrate.
