Arabian Nights is a collection of ancient Middle Eastern and South Asian short stories and folk tales. They are also known as One Thousand and One Nights.

The tales were collected over many centuries by authors, translators, and scholars across Asia and North Africa. Written originally in Arabic, the collection first appeared in an English-language edition in 1706. Many different versions of the tales exist. In some, there are a few hundred tales, while in others, there are 1,001 or more stories.

Every version of Arabian Nights features the same frame story. A frame story is a narrative written to set the stage for a series of shorter stories. This technique helps to heighten the drama and suspense of the entire tale.

The main frame story of Arabian Nights tells the tale of the ruler Shahryar and of Scheherazade. Shahryar discovers that both his brother's wife and his own wife have been unfaithful. He has his first wife executed. Shahryar comes to distrust all women. He becomes a bitter and grief-stricken man. He decides to marry a different virgin every day. He is such a jealous man that he has all the women executed the next morning. This way his wives will not be able to cheat and dishonor him.

His vizier, a high-ranking officer, finds him the women he marries and kills. Eventually, he cannot find any more virgins. He tells his daughter Scheherazade his troubles. She offers to be the ruler's next bride. Her father fears for his daughter's life, but he reluctantly agrees.

On her wedding night, Scheherazade knows about her murderous husband. So, she weaves an enchanting tale to entertain her husband and to keep herself alive. But she does not end the story; she leaves her husband in suspense. He cannot kill her, as he wants to know how the story ends.
