

The outward signs of puberty described here are determined by sex-specific sex hormones. During childhood little or no sex hormones are produced by the boy's testicles. But from the eleventh year a certain amount of testosterone production, never small, may be clearly detected in the sex glands. Between the ages of thirteen and sixteen the testicles increase production of male hormones (known as androgens); production is at its peak at the age of about twenty-five to thirty. While testosterone is being produced in the testicles, another hormone made up of weaker androgens is produced in the cortex of the adrenal gland. The production of estrogen, a general female sex hormone, increases at the same time as the production of androgens in the male organism. Female hormones are also produced in the adrenal glands and testicles. Testosterone is converted into estrogen in the liver. The function of the female sex glands in the male organism is not yet

Signs of puberty appear slightly earlier in girls than in boys, usually at about age ten to eleven. They are also brought about by the combined action of androgens and estrogens.

Unlike the male sex glands, the testicles, which may produce sperm in undiminished quantity from puberty throughout life, the ovaries produce only a finite number of egg cells, right from birth. Approximately 400,000 oocytes, mature egg cells, are present in both ovaries. Only a small fraction of them come to maturity during the woman's reproductive period.

As in a boy, the external changes in a pubescent girl take place in a characteristic order. First the mammary glands swell, then the pubic hair appears gradually, and at the same time the menstrual growth spurt begins. Over the next few years the breasts grow larger. Somewhere between age eleven menstruation (menses) begins. The menstruation may also set in as early as age ten or not until age fifteen or sixteen.

The production of estrogen in the ovaries is influenced by the course of puberty. As the androgens and estrogens, androgens, are produced in the female body, causing the growth of the secondary female pubic hair. These male hormones are secreted partly in the ovaries, and to a lesser extent by the adrenal glands. Towards the end of the menstrual period, generally twenty to twenty-five days, the follicle develops.

In the first half of the menstrual cycle a follicle ripens on the ovary, then it comes to a place. In the second phase the follicle degenerates and a "yellow body" forms from the remains of the follicle as a hormone-secreting organ. This organ provokes the menstrual flow. If this menstrual cycle occurs regularly over a long period of time, which a girl may ascertain with the help of a menstruation calendar and by measuring the basal temperature (see Methods of Contraception), then puberty is over.

As soon as the first physical signs of puberty appear in their children, parents should prepare to notice further important physical changes. They will soon observe in themselves—in a girl, menstruation and in a boy, seminal

A mother should understand the changes that her child is going through. During a period, a girl should make her general health condition quite good. During menstruation, a mother should make it clear to the child that menstruation is a healthy and normal physical function, and it makes her feel better. Parents should be aware of the beginning of the transition from childhood.

As a rule it is the father of the child, since his testicles produce sperm cells, puberty will be noticed in the boy's first seminal emission. A father or mother may have a few boys. If a boy is not yet a man, experience and think he's
