C. Name That Protest! Take a look at the diary entries of these young civil rights activists and decide which type of protest they participated in. Check the action that each story describes.

1. I walk to my summer job with my brother six days a week. Last summer, we rode the bus, and it only took us 15 minutes. Now we walk four miles each way! It takes over an hour, but it is important for us all to send a message. The bus company needs to know that we do not support segregated seating and discrimination.

2. It was scary, but we sat down at the lunch counter and waited to be served. It wasn't fair that this diner refused to serve blacks, and we decided to sit at that counter until they did serve us. We didn't make a scene, didn't yell, didn't break stuff. We just sat there and waited. Angry people came up and hit us, yelled in our faces, and even dumped a milkshake on my friend's head! But we stayed. After three straight days, the diner finally decided to serve us!

3. My feet hurt! We are on day three of our four day walk from Selma to Montgomery, Alabama. We travel about 12 miles a day and sleep in the fields alongside the road. It isn't easy, but we sing songs and meet other people as we walk. Our goal is to get the state and federal politicians to help blacks vote in the South. We hope that having over 25,000 in our group will get their attention and make change!

4. A bunch of my friends from college and I joined other students and drove to the South to get African Americans to register to vote. Many were scared because groups like the KKK had been beating up people when they went to the polling places. If a boss found out that his black employee was registered to vote, he'd fire him! We went down to educate them about their rights and support them so they would get out and vote!
