

Electrical Code Changes in Michigan¹

(Based on Part 8, P.A. 230, the 2005 NEC[®] and the 2003 MRC)

This discussion of electrical code changes is based upon the Part 8 Rules of Michigan Public Act 230 that went into effect November 23, 2007 which adopts the 2005 National Electrical Code with some modifications. A discussion of the modifications is covered in Tech Note 107. The Michigan Electrical Code (MEC) applies to electrical installations in facilities other than one- and two-family dwellings. For one- and two-family dwellings the Michigan Residential Code (MRC) applies which at the time this document was prepared was based upon the 2003 edition of the International Residential Code (2003 IRC). The 2003 IRC is based upon the 2002 NEC and, therefore, differences exist between the present Michigan Residential Code and the Michigan Electrical Code. One major difference is the installation of arc-fault circuit-interrupters in one- and two-family dwellings and where ground-fault circuit-interrupter protected receptacles are required.

This Tech Note covers the majority of the electrical code changes that will result in the way wiring is to be installed in Michigan. This document is not intended as an official interpretation of the particular section discussed. Before making a decision with respect to any installation of electrical wiring or equipment the reader is instructed to study the specific reference in the 2005 National Electrical Code[®].

Here are some overall changes that occurred in the 2005 NEC. The rules for temporary installations were once again moved, this time to Article 590. In the previous edition of the Code it was Article 527, and before that it was Article 305. There was some reorganization and a nearly complete renumbering of Articles 800, 810, 820, and 830. There are three new articles that are particularly important, Article 409 on industrial control panels, Article 506 on Zone 20, 21, and 22 hazardous locations with dust and flyings, and Article 682 dealing with electrical installations in natural and artificially made bodies of water. The common bonding grid for a permanent swimming pool is now called an equipotential bonding grid, and installation directions are much more specific. The walkway around the pool is now required to contain metal to reduce chances of step voltages. Even though the 2008 NEC is not in effect in Michigan, the rules on swimming pool bonding are easier to understand in that edition. Article 220 was completely reorganized and renumbered, although the actual changes are minimal. Other significant changes are:

- grounding electrodes for services
- GFCI requirements
- new terminology used with AFCIs
- wiring on roofs exposed to the sun (see also 310.15(B)(2)(a) in the 2008 NEC)
- new industrial control panel article (see Art. 409)
- new zone system for combustible dust and flyings (see Art. 506)
- swimming pool equipotential grid (see 680.26 in the 2008 NEC)
- new article on wiring at natural and artificial bodies of water (see Art. 682)

In Article 100 there is a new definition of a system bonding jumper which is intended to apply to a separately derived system. A system bonding jumper is a connection between a grounded circuit conductor and the equipment grounding conductor of a separately derived system. At a service this is called the main bonding jumper. The system bonding jumper is permitted to be installed at the source of the separately derived system or at the first disconnecting means supplied by the system.

Also in Article 100 a fine print note was added to the definition of qualified person that makes reference to NFPA 70E-2004 for electrical safety training requirements.

110.15: This section requires the phase conductor with the higher voltage to ground for a 4-wire delta.
