Protein Synthesis

Protein synthesis is the process by which cells build proteins. It is a fundamental biological process that occurs in all living organisms. The process involves the translation of genetic information from DNA into a functional protein.

Transcription

Transcription is the first step in protein synthesis. It occurs in the nucleus of eukaryotic cells and in the cytoplasm of prokaryotic cells. During transcription, a segment of DNA is copied into a messenger RNA (mRNA) molecule. The mRNA molecule then carries the genetic information to the ribosome.

Translation

Translation is the second step in protein synthesis. It occurs in the cytoplasm of the cell. During translation, the mRNA molecule is read by a ribosome, and the genetic information is used to assemble a specific protein. The ribosome consists of two subunits, and the mRNA molecule is positioned between them. The ribosome moves along the mRNA molecule, and as it does, it synthesizes a polypeptide chain. The polypeptide chain is made up of amino acids, and the sequence of amino acids is determined by the sequence of nucleotides in the mRNA molecule.

Protein Folding

Once a polypeptide chain has been synthesized, it must fold into a specific three-dimensional shape in order to function. The folding process is driven by the interactions between the amino acid side chains of the polypeptide chain. The final shape of the protein is determined by the sequence of amino acids and the interactions between them.

Protein Function

Proteins perform a wide variety of functions in the cell. Some proteins act as enzymes, which catalyze chemical reactions. Other proteins act as structural proteins, which provide support and shape to the cell. Still other proteins act as signaling molecules, which transmit information from one cell to another.
