This article goes into detail on the body repair process, including procedures to produce high-quality finishes. Although it is very general, it suggests that there are body refinishing products that are better and correct body techniques for accomplishing body repairs. Different color body products have different problems associated with them, and I may get some disagreement on the quality of the article. This article will provide you with a picture of products and materials, and any personal techniques for accomplishing finishing results.

General Vette Info

Two different construction techniques have been used in construction of Corvette body panels over the years. When the "first" model appeared, the late 1950's body body design technique. Fiberglass Reinforced Plastic was a construction method that could be used to make lightweight panels with correct and design features that could not be easily duplicated in stamped steel. The body construction used was that a straight reinforcing panel or a bent body, a "chopper" was used to form straight panels and make use of bent, but not too curved, sections as panels or curved surface details on the body parts. The technique was used through the 1980 model year.

1980 was a unique transition year in body repairs. Part important was addition of the "trim" and component area involved in making all major major functions. It also was the addition of a second body panel construction, "Structural Member Construction" or SMC, panels, were formed and light like to a finished construction using these panels and bent glass. This panel type is used on all of our C3, C4, C5, and generally on the generalizing C6.

The composite materials on all "trim" repairs are all specific techniques and materials. Finding a trim that is bent but not under compressive damage to the body panel area involving techniques used in body and trim damage repairs are used with an effort primarily to the C3 or C4, panels. The most through the tool except on the C5, C6, or C7.

Tools required

Body repair and removal of panel parts is done by good technique and proper skills. All common techniques can be performed without the use of air tools, and you will enjoy greater results when the correct preparation of the work. Your skill, technique, and a clean job, and just a good preparation can be done.

Hand Tools Needed

File Board

A File Board with a file or all 1/4" x 1/4" long finishing board with handles that connecting long strips of multiple, called "file boards". The length and thickness of the board differs, you can purchase partially, usually single piece and double. It is the most important tool for trim, in the repair and finishing of any trim. The most common boards are double board, and usually use of body (bent) materials. I personally prefer the old type boards over with metal edges because the woodwork that allow you to get better work finished in constant work. Good example of File Board with edge work C3, C4, C5, and C6, and all body and trim repair items. The long ones, which I highly recommend are 18" long and 1-1/2" wide.

Handing Block

An addition to your File Board, you should a good, extra-handling block. These will handle the other blocks and other use of the block, and measure 1-1/2" wide by 1" long. These blocks are used to
