

Settlement Geography

urban and rural settlements

What is a settlement? A place where people settle or live.
↳ a connected system of buildings, roads and water and communication networks that allow people to meet their needs.
↳ can be simple or complex:
Simple → unifunctional settlements (one economic activity)
Complex → multifunctional settlements (multiple economic acts.)

Difference between site and situation

Site → Physical space that a settlement occupies situation → relationship between the settlement and its surrounding environment (compared to something else around it.)

Factors affecting site

space occupied

Dry point settlement: site that avoids risk of flooding. sites are located a distance away from a water source, (as water abundant)

Wet point settlement: close to a supply of water. occurs in dry areas where water may be scarce.

Harbors: sheltered sea inlets allow / provide suitable sites for fishing and trading points.

Resources: developed close to where natural resources could be found, such as trees and fertile soil. Resources provide food, building materials and fuel.

Relief: Flat, low lying ground is much easier to build on compared to mountainous land.

Aspect: Southern hemisphere → many settlements are located on north facing slopes of valleys which are sunny and warm

Defensive site: able to defend / see danger.
