What Is a Galaxy?

Read the passage and answer the questions.

A galaxy is a massive system composed of stars, stellar remnants, interstellar gas, dust, and dark matter all bound together by gravity. Galaxies come in various shapes and sizes and the most common form being spiral galaxies with complex patterns that define themselves relative to a central point of mass containing a central nucleus, usually a central supermassive black hole.

The Milky Way is one galaxy that contains our solar system and is classified as a barred spiral galaxy. It is estimated to have over 100 billion stars and spans about 100,000 light-years in diameter. Locally, our own galaxy, like all other galaxies, experiences tidal and orbital forces throughout its life. These interactions can lead to gravitational instabilities, such as galaxy mergers, which form a new galaxy, which will continue to form a larger galaxy.

Galaxies are crucial for understanding the universe's structure and evolution. They are the building blocks of the universe, and studying them can provide insights into the formation of stars and planetary systems. Observing distant galaxies allows astronomers to look back in time to the light from these galaxies, which is seen as our earliest glimpse of the universe. The Hubble Space Telescope has provided the history of the universe and its evolution.

The study of galaxies has advanced significantly with the development of powerful telescopes and space observatories. Astronomers use the Hubble Space Telescope to observe distant galaxies and study their evolution. They also use the James Webb Space Telescope to study the early universe and the formation of the first galaxies. The study of galaxies is a key area of research in astronomy and cosmology, and it continues to be an active field of study.

Understanding galaxies not only enhances our knowledge of the universe but also helps us understand our own galaxy better. It is a field that continues to evolve and expand as we learn more about the universe and its evolution.
