

Radioactive Decay: A Sweet Simulation of Half-Life

INTRODUCTION

In the laboratory, you will simulate the process of radioactive decay using M&M's candies. The candies will represent the parent isotope and the candies that are removed will represent the daughter product.

Procedure:

1. Obtain your "radioactive" simulated parent in the appropriate color. The starting number of simulated nuclei for the candy is 100. Record this number in your data table. The number of candies that are removed will be 50 (50% of the total) and you will have 50 simulated daughter nuclei left in your container with the radioactive candy.

2. Place your "radioactive" simulated parent candy and daughter(s) in the correct color bag. You will have 50 simulated parent(s) and 50 simulated daughter(s) in the bag. Record the number of simulated parent(s) and daughter(s) in your data table. The number of simulated parent(s) and daughter(s) will be 50 and 50, respectively.

3. Repeat the procedure for 10 more generations. Record the number of simulated parent(s) and daughter(s) in your data table.

4. Calculate the average half-life for your simulated parent(s) and daughter(s) in your data table.
