No Sugar Low Carb Cookbook Linda Lynn Ph D, 2020-10-12 One of the easiest and most effective ways to do this is by keeping your sugar and carb intake as low as possible When you consume carbs and sugars these are converted into glucose in the bloodstream as the liver metabolizes them Since carbs are used as a source of energy the body needs to secrete insulin from the pancreas in order to break down glucose and send it into the cells as functional energy Then the body mixes oxygen to create ATP This is the source of energy that helps you power your body's entire system All is good until there is an excess of glucose in the body When this occurs the body stores excess glucose as fat However there comes a point where the body just can't keep up This is where insulin resistance happens In a nutshell your cells simply stop accepting any more glucose as there is simply too much glucose in the bloodstream However the secret is knowing which foods promote low blood sugar levels When you discover these foods you'll find that keeping your diabetes in check doesn't have to be tough You can still enjoy delicious foods with zero guilt
