

A close-up photograph of three wooden blocks stacked vertically. The top block is light-colored and has the word 'LIMITED' printed in a bold, black, serif font. The middle block is a darker shade of wood and has the word 'PARTNERSHIP' printed in the same bold, black, serif font. The bottom block is also a dark shade of wood and is mostly obscured by the middle block. The background is a blurred indoor setting with warm lighting, suggesting a workshop or a rustic interior.

Hamilton,1998 The traditional limited partnership is essentially a financing device that permits passive investors the limited partners to participate in the profits of a firm managed by other persons the general partners without fear of personal liability The general partners are personally liable for all partnership obligations including breaches of fiduciary duties owed to the limited partners A limited partnership with a nominally financed corporation as its sole general partner departs radically from this model and becomes a limited liability entity not unlike a corporation Since there is no prohibition against limited partners serving as shareholders directors or officers of the corporate general partner the organizers and managers of the venture may participate in the sharing of profits and losses as limited partners as well as through the corporate general partner After discussing the unique features of the limited partnership with a corporate general partner and the problems it poses in relation to fiduciary duties owed by the directors and managers of the corporate general partner to the limited partners the author analyzes recent cases and proposes that courts should uniformly impose fiduciary duties on directors and managers of the corporate general partner Additionally the author analyzes the issues raised when control over the general partner is transferred to a third party and concludes that the appropriate analysis for determining whether a transfer is valid is whether the transfer poses an increased risk of harm to the limited partners
