Immigration

New Immigrants from Europe

Immigrants from Europe, including Ireland, Italy, and Poland, were the most numerous immigrants to the United States in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. They were often referred to as the "New Immigrants" because they came from different parts of Europe than the "Old Immigrants" who had come from Great Britain, Germany, and Scandinavia.

Ellis Island and Angel Island: History

In 1890, the U.S. government established Ellis Island as the primary federal immigration station. It was designed to process immigrants from Europe. Angel Island, on the other hand, was established in 1910 to process immigrants from Asia, primarily China and Japan.

Ellis Island and Angel Island

Ellis Island was a busy place, with thousands of immigrants passing through its gates each day. It was a place of hope and despair, where families were reunited or where individuals were turned away. Angel Island, on the other hand, was a place of uncertainty and delay, where immigrants from Asia often spent weeks or even months waiting for their cases to be resolved.

During the 1920s, immigration to the United States was restricted through the Quota System. The Quota System limited the number of immigrants from each country who could enter the United States each year. This system was designed to protect the jobs and wages of American workers.

Immigrants waiting for their cases to be resolved at Ellis Island. Many immigrants were turned away from the island.

The New Immigrants

The New Immigrants brought with them different skills and experiences that helped build the United States. They worked in factories, mines, and on farms. They also brought with them their own cultures, languages, and traditions. Over time, these immigrants and their descendants helped shape the diverse and multicultural society that is the United States today.

Ellis Island

Ellis Island was a place of hope and despair. For many immigrants, it was the first time they had ever been to the United States. They were excited to see the Statue of Liberty and the New York Harbor. But for many others, it was a place of uncertainty and delay. They were often turned away from the island because they did not meet the requirements for entry into the United States.
