

The outward signs of puberty described here are determined by sex-specific sex hormones. During childhood little or no sex hormones are produced by the boy's testicles. But from the eleventh year a certain amount of testosterone production, never small, may be clearly detected in the sex glands. Between the ages of thirteen and sixteen the testicles increase production of male hormones (known as androgens); production peaks at the age of about twenty-five to thirty. While testosterone is being produced in the testicles, another hormone made up of weaker androgens is produced in the cortex of the adrenal gland. The production of estrogen, a general female sex hormone, increases at the same time as the production of androgens in the male organism. Female hormones are also produced in the adrenal glands and testicles. Testosterone is converted into estrogen in the liver. The function of the female sex glands in the male organism is not yet

Signs of puberty appear slightly earlier in girls than in boys, usually at about age ten to eleven. They are also brought about by the combined action of androgens and hormones.

Unlike the male sex glands, the testicles, which may produce sperm in undiminished quantities from puberty throughout life, the ovaries produce only a finite number of egg cells, right from birth. Approximately 400,000 oocytes, mature egg cells, are present in both ovaries. Only a small fraction of them come to maturity during the woman's reproductive period.

As in a boy, the external changes in a pubescent girl take place in a characteristic order. First the mammary glands swell, then the pubic hair appears gradually, and at the same time the menstrual growth spurt begins. Over the next few years the breasts grow larger. Somewhere between age eleven menstruation (menses) begins. The menstruation may also set in as early as age ten or not until age fifteen or sixteen.

The production of estrogen in the ovaries is influenced by the course of puberty. As the female sex hormones, androgens, are produced in the female body, causing the growth of pubic hair, the female sex glands, the ovaries, and to a certain extent the adrenal glands, towards the end of puberty, generally twenty to twenty-two, develop a regular, generally twenty-day cycle.

In the first half of the cycle a follicle ripens on the ovary, then it sheds its outer layer. In the second phase the follicle becomes a "yellow body," formed from the outer layer of the follicle as a hormone-secreting organ. It produces the menstrual flow. If this process occurs regularly over a long period of time, which a girl may ascertain with the help of a menstruation calendar and by measuring the basal temperature (see Methods of Conception), then puberty is over.

As soon as the first physical signs of puberty appear in their children, parents should prepare to notice further important physical changes. They will soon observe in themselves—in a girl, the first menstrual period, and in a boy, seminal

A mother should understand the changes that are taking place in her child. She should know the signs of puberty, and she should be able to help her child through the changes. She should know that the changes are normal, and she should be able to help her child through the changes. She should know that the changes are normal, and she should be able to help her child through the changes.

As a rule it is the father of the child, since he is the one who is most responsible for the child's upbringing. The boy's first sexual experience is usually at night. A father or mother may have a few boys. If a boy is not yet a man, he should be treated as a child.
