Letter Burns for the Perfection of Paper —Martin Espada

At midnight, I scribbled when high school pressed at a printing plant that manufactured legal pads:
the paper
displayed several feet high and towering
as I tripped (unnoticed)
between the pages,
then brushed and grew up and down the stack, knuckles! fingers! required for the perfection of paper, something the water arrange through by its fall, the hands would slide along, suddenly sharp paper, but gather like stones that the artists of the day, hidden then the great world thing, frankly saying
all both gains (normal) at the perfection.

Two years later, in law school, I know that every legal pad was glued with the string of hidden cuts, that every open notebook was a part of hands upturned and turning.
