Most galaxies contain billions to trillions of stars along with planets, moons, and other celestial bodies.

The Milky Way is one galaxy that contains our solar system and is classified as a barred spiral galaxy. It is estimated to have over 100 billion stars and spans about 100,000 light-years in diameter. Besides our own galaxy, there are many other galaxies, including spiral, elliptical, and irregular galaxies. These galaxies can be as far as billions of light-years away from our galaxy.

Scientists are excited for understanding the universe's structure and evolution. They are the building blocks of the universe, and studying them can provide insight into the formation of our own planetary system. Observing distant galaxies allows astronomers to look back in time to the light from these galaxies reach us from a vast distance of space to learn as the Milky Way and understand the history of the universe and its evolution.
