factors that affect how people read VMSs Several topics were reviewed The first topic was literacy Since reading literacy is not a requirement for obtaining a driver s license VMS composition should reflect the varied reading competence levels of motorists It was found that about 25% of Virginians over the age of 16 are weak readers and will likely encounter problems reading VMSs The second topic addressed how people read Reading is an interactive process that derives much of its speed and accuracy from implicit knowledge acquired through familiarity This implies that VMS messages should present familiar standardized content whenever possible A review of the literature on warning signs was the third topic Effective warning signs should have several properties Short concise messages are both easier to read and more likely to be read Signal words such as CAUTION are not effective Finally areas for further research were identified Symbolic messages and abbreviations are worthy of further investigation as they have the potential for easy recognition provided they are familiar to motorists and can be accommodated by the VMS In addition although the MUTCD advises angling the VMS away from the roadway to reduce headlight glare angling the VMS toward the roadway could be desirable for increasing readability In both these areas theoretical and practical work is needed The report recommends that these human factors characteristics and limitations be taken into consideration in the deployment of VMSs and in the composition of their messages
