

The Quickest Claw in the Ocean and the World's Fastest Animals

If you had to make a list of the fastest and loudest things in the world, you're probably going to start thinking of big, noisy things. How about? Space rockets?

Would a tiny little shrimp make your list? People it should!

Scientists recently discovered that jumping shrimps snapping shrimp have some of the loudest sounds in the animal kingdom.

The jumping shrimp can snap their little claws with an acceleration similar to the speed of a bullet leaving a gun! Impressive for an animal that's only about the size of a staple.

Snapping shrimp have one claw larger than the other. The big claw snaps shut so fast that it creates a tiny jet of water.

Illustration of a snapping shrimp's claw.

That's just a little bit quicker than the loudest animal on land, the chimpanzee. Chimpanzees have been measured travelling at 16.7 mph.

Both of these rapid animals can move at quite a bit, but they're not nearly as fast as a car with the fastest difference animal.

The peregrine falcon is the fastest thing in the animal kingdom. They can reach top speeds of around 200 mph when diving through the air. According to Guinness World Records, in 1994, a peregrine falcon named "Frightful" was released from a plane and reached 242 mph as it dived through the air.

Now, that's fast!

	Velocity
perch	Young cod or whiting fish
acceleration	How quickly an object moves to a higher speed
bullet	A small projectile, like that of a gun bullet
bullet

- The water created when a snapping shrimp snaps its claw is one of the loudest sounds on Earth.
- It can reach roughly 200 mph, which makes them one of the fastest animals on the planet.

The jet of water is used at the shrimp's prey. It travels so fast that a bubble is created behind it. The bubble pops with a loud crack and releases a shockwave that can knock its opponent out.

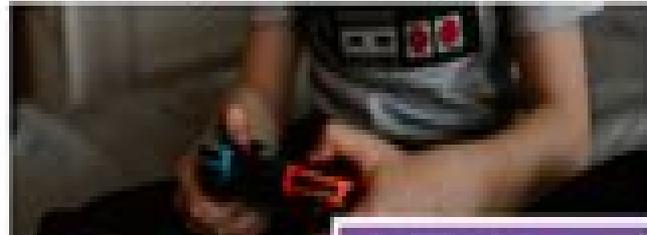

The way they die and live is why they're also known as pistol shrimp.

Their claws may have extreme acceleration but that's not the same as top speed. So, what are the fastest animals in water, air and on land?

In our oceans, the sailfish holds the speed record. With a streamline large tail along their back, these fish have been clocked travelling at 68 mph.

Is Gaming Bad for Young Children?

Do lots of children play video games?

Despite what many parents might think, playing video games for hours every day may not be bad for young children's brains.

A team of researchers from the University of Houston, TX, looked for links between the gaming habits and academic abilities of 1st primary school aged children.

As they worked on the research, the scientists looked up on each child, regardless of how long the children played and what type of games they chose.

On average, the children played video games for 1.1 hours a day. Some of the children were played for as much as 4.1 hours every day.

The team looked for connections between the children's gaming time and their results on a reading ability test.

They didn't expect on the study, the test that the results showed "no direct linkage between video game playing and reading performance".

If you enjoy gaming, then that might sound like good news. However, the results had more.

The findings suggest that video games brought to brain development. However, that doesn't mean they help it either.

In fact, the team found that some games

- According to a recent report from an organization called Ofcom, in the UK around 50% of children aged 5-17 play games on some type of device.
- That includes playing on a games console, tablet, smartphone, PC, smart TV, smart watch or VR headset.

helping the brain development of young adults "don't have the same impact in much younger children."

The team also warned that playing video games takes time away from other activities, such as homework.

"Reasonable amounts of video gaming should be OK, which will be helpful even for the 50%" said Ofcom.
