Phonics instruction is foundational to reading and writing. It teaches students how letters and sounds work together. A key area of focus is the segmentation of word types like CVC (Consonant-vowel-Consonant), CVCV (Consonant-vowel-vowel-Consonant), and CVCVC (Consonant-vowel-Consonant-vowel-Consonant). Teaching these word patterns helps students develop the skills to decode and spell a variety of words.

Use colorful objects associated with letters. Ask students to list their favorite objects from the New Yorker object lists.

Write the words from a word list on a grid. Use the New Yorker object lists to find objects that match the words and bring them to school to use in the lesson.

Use the /c/ sound words from the /c/ word list to create a game. Ask students to bring objects that begin with the /c/ sound to school to use in the /c/ word list activity.

Use the /v/ sound words from the /v/ word list to create a game. Ask students to bring objects that begin with the /v/ sound to school to use in the /v/ word list activity.
