Full Circle David L. Cisco,2010-04-01 An Apollo Technicians Journey Through American History David L Cisco looked at the lunar module with its paper thin walls and countless switches and dials and had a moment of doubt Could this thing really take people to the moon In 1969 Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin answered that question But the astronauts had help an unsung 400 000 member workforce made the Apollo program and Americas race to the final frontiera reality As a thirteen year old junkyard forklift operator Cisco never dreamt of being a part of American history With the chaos of the 1960s swirling around him this biracial young man decided to give up life in New York for a future as an Apollo technician in Houston Moving into the corporate world Cisco hired some of the first female and African American airline pilots in the United States He and his wife later launched a successful travel agency Along the way he was elected to public office and worked tirelessly for charity and his community earning the kid from the junkyard a trip to the White House Destination
