

Origin of the Earth

The Earth probably formed from material in the solar nebula—the cloud of gas and dust that led to the formation of the Sun. This material gradually grew into a larger and larger body that became a red-hot ball of rock and metal. Later the rocky crust formed, its surface cooling enough to allow the continents to appear. Even later the oceans arrived, as well as the tiny organisms that released oxygen into the atmosphere. Although much of this gas was initially consumed in chemical reactions, over time, it allowed the development of multicellular organisms and an explosion of life that took place at the start of the Paleozoic Era, 542 million years ago.

Continental Drift

The flow of the continents, which are part of tectonic plates that drift across the Earth's surface at the rate of a fingernail's growth, has taken place over 400 million years. Africa, Australia, and Antarctica were part of the supercontinent Gondwana. When tectonic plates are pushed together, they can push together and submerge one under the other, creating a rift basin. The rift basin deepens and can eventually fill with water, forming a sea that eventually becomes the Atlantic Ocean basin. When plates slide past one another, they can create a mountain range or a trench. The plates can also pull apart, creating a rift basin, a trench, or a sea.

1 400 MILLION YEARS AGO
The supercontinent Gondwana formed as tectonic plates pushed together.

2 300 MILLION YEARS AGO
The plates have slowly split. Africa, Australia, and Antarctica are moving apart.

3 200 MILLION YEARS AGO
Continents split, forming Africa and South America as the western Atlantic Ocean sea opens.

Origin of the Earth

The Earth was formed 4.5 billion years ago from a cloud of dust and gas. In the beginning, it was a molten, glowing sphere. As it cooled, the crust began to form, and the atmosphere began to form. The first life appeared 3.8 billion years ago.

Chronology

Chronology is the study of time in the Earth's past. It includes the study of fossils and the study of the Earth's history. It is the study of the Earth's past and the study of the Earth's future.

Through the study of fossils, scientists can learn about the Earth's past. They can learn about the Earth's climate, the Earth's life, and the Earth's geology.

1 The earliest life forms were simple organisms that lived in the ocean.

2 The first land animals were simple organisms that lived on land.

3 The first complex life forms were plants and animals that lived on land.

Tectonic Plates

The surface of the Earth is composed of tectonic plates. These are rigid upper plates, some of which are composed of other plates. The plates' boundaries are marked by plate boundaries, rifts, ridges, and trenches.
