study evaluates three main biases found in decision making to determine which one is most likely to be utilized in making decisions It also investigates ways a tool can be created to allow borrowers to make better choices I use the Elaborated Action Design Research Methodology to diagnose design and implement an effective tool In my study I create an artifact that allows me to create nudges for better repayment selection and a secondary artifact that helps me to determine if the biases I believe to be affecting decision making are accurate I also create a calculator to determine which repayment option that is available to the borrower is best based on their individual goals An interview of 41 University of South Florida students is used to obtain their feedback on which selections they would make and why My research contributes to the student loan industry Much discussion exists about issues within the industry regarding repayment of student loans and the number of borrowers who default In my professional life I have observed that many who default or struggle with repayment of loans do so because they simply are in the wrong payment program and do not get the right advice to select the appropriate option The government puts everyone into a standard option automatically Default Option forcing them to determine what if any better options exist for them If we could simply select the correct option for their needs and circumstances from the beginning much of the issue with default and past due payments could be resolved I conclude there is evidence that supports those who are given a Default option tend to choose or stay with that option because of several factors These factors include believing this option is best for them and making complex decisions can be overwhelming causing some to make no decision at all My findings also determine that Social Norm and Warning nudges can be very powerful when given a complicated choice to make

stories are a dime a dozen But students today are faced with a seemingly insurmountable paradox Research consistently shows that the clearest viable option to financial stability is a college degree But if and when Americans decide to pursue diplomas student loan payments quickly follow and even after securing full time employment many borrowers struggle to make ends meet for years In Sunk Cost journalist Jillian Berman explores how the nation s student loan program went from a well intentioned initiative aimed at helping low and middle income students afford college to one that traps borrowers in long term debt Berman interviewed dozens of borrowers and policymakers and dug into the archives to unearth the true causes of the student loan problem A couple of generations ago policy makers generously subsidized Americans college educations because they knew it would be advantageous for the entire country a more educated population meant better quality of life for all But today higher education is viewed as an individual goal so students and their families are expected to be on the hook for it themselves Berman explains how this enormous shift happened which industries benefit from it and what it means for college going Americans today She shares real life stories of college graduates who are being crushed under some of the harshest consequences of the student loan system These borrowers pursued higher education in hopes of a better life and yet some have been trapped in debt for decades making it difficult to put food on the table much less imagine a life beyond debt By connecting personal accounts to the policy history of student loans Berman makes clear that if American society continues to push students toward higher education but fails to truly subsidize it the financial strain will become unbearable for all but the most privileged The current system is broken but Berman proposes that significant changes are possible and will require political will from state lawmakers and Congress along with a philosophical shift to tackle one of the largest consumer finance challenges of our time
