Automatic An Introductory Treatment of the Purposes Equipment and Methods of Automatic Signalling and Track Circuits for Steam and Electric Railways for Railwaymen Students and Others I could not as I looked through the accompanying pages of my son s book help allowing my thoughts to wander over the changes that have been made in my day in railway signalling When I entered the railway service five and forty years ago signalling generally was very primitive Now it is almost perfect the machine itself has reached perfection but the man behind the machine is human and therefore frail It is in this latter respect that there is any weakness and therein lies the main cause for the demand for automatic signalling and track circuit the subject of the present work I remembered too that although this perfection has now been reached its development has been slow It might have been reached much earlier because in 1872 four years before I joined the railway Sykes put down his first automatic signalling at the Victoria Station of the Metropolitan District Railway and Dr Robinson patented his method of track circuit on which all the automatic signalling of to day is based It is within the last twenty years that there has been this great development At the time my first book was published in May 1900 there was no automatic signalling in this country except that since removed on the Liverpool Overhead there were not half a dozen installations of track circuit and only one power signalling plant and that in a goods yard About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare
