

Black History Month

February is Black History Month in the United States. Many people call Carter G. Woodson the father of Black History Month. Woodson wanted people to learn more about Black history. During the summer of 1915, he went to Washington, D.C., to celebrate freedom. In September of that year, he started a group called the Association of African American Life and History. They chose to celebrate Black history for one week in February, starting in 1916.

They chose February because two important people in Black history were born during that month. Frederick Douglass was an abolitionist. He believed that no one should own Black people. Abraham Lincoln was president during the Civil War. Slavery ended after the Civil War.

Many people wanted to celebrate and learn about Black history. Teachers asked for lessons to teach their classes. Black history clubs began forming. Woodson's group set a theme for each year. They gave teachers pictures, lessons, and posters to teach Black history.

Many people started celebrating Black history throughout February. President Gerald Ford made Black History Month official in 1976. In 1984, Congress passed a law requiring presidents to make a statement called a proclamation each year. Every American president has issued a proclamation each year. This shows that Black History Month is important.

Every year, a theme is chosen for Black History Month. In 1976, the theme was focused on the achievements of Black women. Some of the women celebrated were Sojourner Truth and Mary McLeod Bethune. We continue to celebrate Black History Month each year.
