ignored ones in order to answer these questions Particular attention is paid to the role of planetary cycles and questions of cross cultural knowledge transfer A new account is given of how knowledge of cyclicity its conceptualization and its use in predictive practices developed in Babylonia and the Greco Roman world from the first millennium BCE until Late Antiquity It is argued that the predictive turn in Babylonian astronomy and astrology led to a new understanding of how astronomical and earthly phenomena are interconnected through time and space The emergence of horoscopic astrology led to the question of whether human existence is determined by cycles Even the universe as a whole is governed by cycles according to Plato and later Greco Roman scholars
