The field of educational research has grown and changed since the 1950s. Advances in technology, including the Internet, have provided access to educational research and information previously unavailable. In the 1970s and 1980s, the field of educational research was largely dominated by quantitative research. However, in the 1990s and 2000s, there was a shift towards qualitative research, which focuses on understanding the experiences and perspectives of individuals. This shift was driven by a growing emphasis on student-centered learning and the importance of understanding the individual needs and experiences of students. The field of educational research is now more diverse and inclusive, reflecting the needs and experiences of a wider range of students and educators.
