1.0 INTRODUCTION

The word statistics has different meaning to different persons. Knowledge of statistics is applicable in day to day life in different ways. In daily life it means general calculation of items, in railway statistics means the number of trains operating, number of passenger's freight etc. and so on. Thus statistics is used by people to take decision about the problems on the basis of different type of quantitative and qualitative information available to them.

However, in behavioural sciences, the word 'statistics' means something different from the common concern of it. Prime function of statistic is to draw statistical inference about population on the basis of available quantitative information. Overall, statistical methods deal with reduction of data to convenient descriptive terms and drawing some inferences from them. This unit focuses on the above aspects of statistics.

1.1 OBJECTIVES

After going through this unit, you will be able to:

- Define the term statistics,
- Explain the status of statistics,
- Describe the nature of statistics,
- State basic concepts used in statistics, and
- Analyse the uses and misuses of statistics.
